I've got a Linq-to-SQL query with a where clause and a select clause. I'd like to be able to tell if any records were inserted. Here's my code: `var q = from foo in session.Query() where foo.Bar.Value == "value" select foo; if (q.Count() != 0) { // Did an insert succeed? }` The thing is, I need to store a reference to foo in memory for the duration of the query (one or more of the records I select could have been updated while I'm querying, and I need to know). After this query completes, I'll remove it from the session. So, I need to know if the insert took place. A: A LINQ query
