Endothelial damage induced by coronary angioplasty is a critical event in the mechanism of restenosis. Angiotensin II (Ang II), which is released by endothelial cells following injury, can induce platelet aggregation and adhesion, and it may therefore play a role in the development of restenosis. We measured the amount of platelet-bound Ang II in patients undergoing coronary angioplasty. Blood samples were collected from healthy volunteers (n = 11), and from patients with stable angina (n = 28), unstable angina (n = 20), and after successful angioplasty (n = 13) at baseline, 30 min, and 2 h following dilatation. Platelet-bound Ang II was measured by immunoassay. The amount of platelet-bound Ang II was significantly increased after angioplasty compared to the values in healthy volunteers, and was even higher in patients with unstable angina after 30 min and 2 h. Patients with restenosis after coronary angioplasty have a significantly higher level
