Initial results of a phase I-II clinical trial using hyperthermia plus photodynamic therapy to treat primary brain tumors. Local control and survival rates of patients with primary brain tumors have improved with surgery, radiation therapy, and cytotoxic chemotherapy but have remained relatively unchanged over the last 3 decades. The use of hyperthermia, as an adjunct to radiation or chemotherapy, has been shown to increase therapeutic success in other locations. We performed a phase I-II clinical trial of a combination of hyperthermia, photodynamic therapy, and chemotherapy for the treatment of primary brain tumors. Forty-four patients were treated with a median of 9 days (range, 3-31 days)
