Resharper Ultimate 2019.1.1The effects of growth factors on the formation of cultured calvarial cell layers and the degree of osteogenesis of the cell layer. We investigated the effects of transforming growth factor beta (TGF-beta), basic fibroblast growth factor (bFGF), platelet-derived growth factor (PDGF), and insulin-like growth factor-I (IGF-I) on the formation of cultured calvarial cell layers from neonatal rats and the degree of osteogenesis of the cell layer. First, we established a method for culturing calvarial cell layers by establishing a method to optimize the number of cells on the cell layer. The cells were cultured at a density of  $4.5 \times 10^4$  cells/cm<sup>2</sup> for 3 days and then cultured at a density of  $1.7 \times 10^5$  cells/cm<sup>2</sup> for 9 days. The cultured cell layers were then stained with calcein green to quantify cell layers. The cell layer formation was dependent on the presence of the growth factors during the cell culture, and the number of cell layers formed was dependent on the presence of the growth factors. In contrast, the degree of osteogenesis of the cell layers was not significantly affected by the presence of the growth factors. These results indicate that the degree of osteogenesis of the cell layer was not a major factor in the optimization of cell density for the formation of the cell layer.
