A: The issue is that the.gz file contains a series of lines that end with ^M - ^M is the Byte Order Mark. On unix systems the terminal/shell knows what these are and will silently skip the bytes. But when transferred to a windows machine, the unix terminal treats these as part of the data. The fix is to use the unix2dos command. I'm guessing you have a version of dosbox somewhere on your system. unix2dos yourfile.gzip then you can gunzip it like so gunzip yourfile.gzip EDIT:

As a nice side effect of using unix2dos the file may end up uncompressed slightly different. If you want it to be identical to the original you'll need to run dos2unix yourfile.gzip. I'm just saying it's handy if you have a mac to use unix2dos, that's all. “It’s with a broken heart that I can say that there is no more,” the physicist said. “But the price is too high.” Image The laboratory that contained the accident.
