It's the very failure of the American dream that the Trump movement, and Trump himself, has tapped into. As the economy grows stronger and more Americans find employment, they start to worry about Trump's apocalyptic vision of the United States. In The American Dream, Richard Hofstadter identified the loss of a sense of purpose as a "variety of soft, diffuse malaise," and he described the conditions that could have led to such a loss of the sense of purpose in his time as America's entry into the cold war. "The broader the sphere of hard and vital interest that citizens feel themselves to be called upon to defend," he wrote, "the more clearly they see the dangers to them in the pieties and customs that serve the common cause. The sense of purpose, the feeling of being called upon to play a meaningful role in history, is for this reason a major source of the traditional American cohesion." Q: Django model cache behaving strangely after migration I have a problem after migrating my django app. I have a model that takes approx 15s to load. It works fine, but for no apparent reason the cache expires after 3mins. I have no configuration set for `expire_cache`. I've looked at the logs and the only message there is `Cache-Control: private, max-age=3600`. For reference, my caches are defined in `models.py`: `CACHE_BACKEND = 'django.core.cache.backends.memcached.MemcachedCache'` `CACHE_MIDDLEWARE_ALIAS = 'memcache'` `CACHE_MIDDLEWARE_KEY_PREFIX`
