SACRAMENTO (KPIX 5) — “The Cure” is quickly healing, and now the horse is ready to go home. The horse who suffered spinal injuries after being kicked at a Petaluma home is back home and recovering after surgery. A local vet who happens to be a big fan of football played a big part in helping “The Cure” get back on his hooves. Darrell Athey, president of the Animal Care Foundation, told KPIX 5 reporter Marc Caulfield he called San Francisco 49ers quarterback Colin Kaepernick and asked him to help save the horse. Athey says the NFL star stepped up. Kaepernick arranged with the San Francisco 49ers to give the horse “a ride” back to his home. Kaepernick’s vet says the horse’s head was held in place during the ride in the passenger seat of a private car. “So I’m leaving my veterinarian practice on Friday morning and driving to the ranch,” said Dr. Justin Alexander. Alexander says Kaepernick works as a personal trainer, but it turns out he is also a veterinarian. He was a 45-minute ride from the horse’s home. “When I was turning in my driveway my first question was, ‘Can I help you with anything?’,” said Alexander. The vet says the horse’s owners were not home. “I was just seeing if there was anything the animal needed,” Alexander said. The vet says the car, driven by Kaepernick, did not have a lock. He hopes the owner will be able to lock the car door when he returns. “There’s a pretty good chance that horse will be good as new,” Alexander said. The horse is still in the hospital, and the vet will do the follow-up care. His owner, says her prayers have been answered and she is so grateful for the help and attention.
