Preemptive analgesia is the capability of an opioid analgesic to relieve acute pain before the onset of a nociceptive signal and is used clinically to reduce postsurgical pain. The success of preemptive analgesia in human patients has prompted the development of animal models in which thermal nociceptive systems can be characterized. All animal models that have been used to date, involving nociceptive-specific reflexes have the characteristic of a tonic activity preceding a noxious threshold reaction. These in vivo models are useful for understanding the pharmacology of preemptive analgesia since no antinociceptive pharmacology is performed prior to the noxious threshold pain. A comparative review of all pharmacological agents that can be used as analgesics suggests that yohimbine, the alpha 2-antagonist yohimbine

Japan's defence budget shrunk at a faster pace last year than expected as the country struggles to come to grips with the economic impact of last year's deadly earthquake and tsunami. The budget was down 2.1% from the previous year, according to monthly data published on Thursday by the Ministry of Defence. Defence spending was cut for the first time since 1984, when it was shrinking to support the rapidly disappearing Japanese economy. The one-off drop in spending is unlikely to affect Japan's already strained finances. But defence spending has declined an average 1.4% each year over the past decade. Japan's decline in defence spending — and the resulting budget tightening — is attributable to the social impact of last year's massive earthquake and tsunami that left about 18,000 people dead or missing. Efforts to rebuild the devastated Pacific coast towns of Sendai and Ishinomaki will likely take years, hitting private companies, the ministry estimates. Nuclear energy costs have soared as utilities struggle to restore damaged reactors. Cuts to spending on the rest of the defence budget will likely result in further reductions, says defence analyst Kenji Kato of Union of Concerned Scientists. "Defence officials say that won't change the government's spending priorities," he said, adding the problems with the nuclear reactors "are dragging down the economy." The government is also struggling to cope
